Abstract photography, sometimes referred to as non-objective, experimental, conceptual or concrete photography, is a manner of displaying a visual image that is not directly related to the subject world, created using photographic equipment, processes or materials. Abstract photography can isolate a snippet of a natural scene to remove its inherent context from the viewer, may be intentionally staged to create a seemingly untrue appearance from real objects or involve the use of colour, light, shadow, texture and/or shape to convey a feeling or impression.
